Narratives and Medicine: The Power of Stories to Shape Clinical Practice
OE 958

Brief description (200 words or less of course details):

This course will explore the power of narratives—in written, oral and visual forms—to shape the way we, as medical students, conceptualize and practice medicine. The care of the sick unfolds in stories, and effective healthcare demands the ability to recognize, absorb, interpret and engage with the stories of others.

Semester offered:  Spring

Registration information:  Contact student leaders below

Requirements for credit:

Attendance of 5/6 sessions and completion of a 2 page double-spaced written reflection at the end of the course

Contact information (student and faculty leaders):

Jacqueline Chipkin and Marya Pulaski

Offered in this academic year:  YES